Lucid's luxury sedan -- the Air-- is supposed to start shipping to customers this year. Unlike many of those other startups, though, Lucid Motors has been around for a while. It was founded in 2007 as a battery company called Atieva.

How does lucid make money?

Lucid's upbeat revenue comes as it slashes prices and offers incentives like cheaper financing to woo customers who have been gravitating towards less-expensive hybrid vehicles as high interest rates pressure budgets. The company - backed by Saudi Arabia's sovereign wealth fund - still expects to make 9,000 vehicles for the full year.

Who is Lucid Motors?

Unlike many of those other startups, though, Lucid Motors has been around for a while. It was founded in 2007 as a battery company called Atieva. But in 2016 it set out to build an all-electric sedan of its own, and tapped Peter Rawlinson -- the former lead engineer of the Model S program at Tesla -- to head the project.

The company's new Lucid Financial Services will finance your car in 24-month, 36-month, or 48-month loans. However, what Lucid Financial will crucially add is a leasing option. Leasing an EV is a great way to drive a state-of-the-art car today and not lose out when the next wave of technology comes along and improves the breed.
