Let's get this out of the way up front: A lithium battery can cost three or four times as much as a lead-acid AGM battery of similar nominal capacity. For example, I found a 110 Ah Group 31 AGM battery at West Marine listed for $272; a Northstar High Performance AGM, also Group 31 but with 102 Ah, costs $440.

That means boat owners can expect to discharge and recharge their lead-acid battery about 1,000 times over its lifespan. A typical marine lithium battery will last at least 3,000 cycles, possibly up to 5,000. By making the switch to a lithium battery, you're more than doubling your battery's longevity. They Require Less Maintenance
