Then came Solar Power, the lyrics here speak to me. It's like we are in the same wavelength. The 90s inspired sound in this album is so unique in a sea of sameness and rehashed sounds you see in top 40 charts. It's a pity people only judge quality by numbers and bought chart positions.

The Path, Solar Power, Mood Ring, Stoned at the Nail Salon, Secrets of a girl, and Fallen Fruit were all songs I enjoyed. I went back and listened to Melodrama and definitely see the difference and how low risk this album is in comparison, but I think if she comes out with another album not too far in the future and goes back to her usual sound ...

I'm glad that the record has got a bit of a critical reassessment among Lorde fans, evn tho the general public hasn't (yet) come to appreciate the unique piece of art that album is. With Power being that good as it and with both Unreleased 1 and 2 being great, Ella's creative pIace at the moment is so grat that I think that with L4 ella can ...

I think that's my biggest issue with the album -- it doesn't feel like I'm being taken on a journey. even though melodrama was, at it's core, essentially a breakup album, every song felt like I was being shown a different piece of what that journey looks like. the fresh and visceral anger at being first broken up with, the shy and ...

also, i don't think the negative reception is just because people expected a melodrama 2 sound and didn't get what they wanted. sure that was the case leading up to the song Solar Power, but after that, everyone knew what sound to expect from the album. the criticism i see isn't that solar power is bad because it's not like melodrama/ph ... i also want to add, a lot of people won't go to see these artists in concert. especially for example, lorde is doing a smaller tour this time around. and since listening to someone's music daily doesn't make them much, if any money, this is how a casual listener would support them, by purchasing hard copies. in the long run it's not much money for how much xyz artist has given me for ...

And that is still how I view the album, but there's more to it than that. Honestly, I wish she chose The Path as her lead single. It's still summery and playful, but it has that melancholic feel that a lot of Lorde fans identify with and is a more accurate representation of the album as a whole. It's an earworm with some layers to it whereas Solar Power (single) feels like one of her weaker songs imo.

Global capitalism is nearly there. At the end of the world there will only be liquid advertisement and gaseous desire. I'm not at all saying you HAVE to love Solar Power. Even fantastic artists like Lorde will have albums that don't resonate with people EVER. And that's okay if it never does. All I'd like to say (in addition to my thesis on why Solar Power was received the way it was), is to try this album again when you feel the urge to stay in on a Friday.

Been a Pure Heroine die hard for 10 years. I dismissed Melodrama and even more so Solar Power when they came out. Wasn't really into them. But recently I've realized my sins. They are both amazing. I still rank PH the highest of all of them, but the other 2 deserve more praise. Especially Solar Power. That's all.
